

WEBERFIELDS OFF WITH A "WHOOPEE."

They Start the Season in the Old Lively Fashion, Using "Whoop-Dee-Do," Which is Mild in Humor.

MISS RUSSELL VERY FUNNY.

Back View of Her Man's Attire Distracting—Show Girl Burlesque Laughable—Louis Mann and Evie Stetson Join Funmakers.

We hate to keep you up, but while rather in winding the clock you might listen to the "Whoop-De-Doos."

DEDICATED TO BROOKLYN.

"What is that amen?" "Amen is the finish of a slow conversation."

SLEEP ON, DEAR HEART!

"Ideas are just the same as a dream, only you don't wake up."

KNOW YOURSELF.

"A liar is a man whose outside speaking don't agree with his inside thinking."

FROM PETER TO FRANKIE.

"A show girl is three diamond rings, a sealin' sacque and no voice—my regards to Frankie."

OUCH!

"I suppose your idea is to get a foreign play and have Belasco write it for you."

KEEP IT DARK.

"How can he get into the nobility?" "Through Williams and Walker."

BUT SOMETIMES IT'S TONGUE-TIED.

"Money speaks in every language."

WITH ALL OUR FAULTS.

"A true friend is a man who knows you're no good and is willing to forget it."

THE SILENT PARTNER.

"The first principle of business is to let the other fellow do the dirty work."

FAINT HEART AND FAT LADY.

"When I see all those persons out in front I tremble. I shake the stage." "Well, don't you care as long as the people don't shake the theatre."

THE ACID TEST.

"Your friend is suspicious?" "Yes, every time he met a golden opportunity he put acid on it to see if it is plated."

"YOUR BILL, PLEASE!"

"What is an American plan hotel?" "You pay for everything whether you get it or not."

ABSENT TREATMENT.

"What you need is exercise—physical torture." "I got one of them rubber exercisers and hung it up in my room, and I gained six pounds in six days—how was that?" "You didn't use it enough." "Why, do you have to use it?"

WET AND DRY SPORTS.

"There are two kinds of mould-board sports. One is the man who buys and don't drink, and the other is the man who drinks and don't buy."

A HEAVY-WEIGHT.

"A cent in the hand is worth two in the slot."

NERVY NETHERSOLE.

"Nerve is the first requisite of an actress. Some of them have a lot of nerve to go on at all."

BARGAIN-COUNTER ART.

"It is true that Russell Sage tried to buy the Venus de Milo?" "He looked at it, but he wanted a cut-rate, because he said it was damaged."

All joking aside, and with due deference to Edgar Smith, the funniest lines in the new Weber & Fields piece are those contributed by trousered Lillian Russell.

Not that Miss Russell wasn't graceful and good form, and not that she wasn't as swaggy as you'll find them in front of the Rossmore, even. But she was, nevertheless, funny, especially when she turned her back, which, it might be added, was for only one breathless moment.

The English frock coat fitted and the hang of the trousers was just as advertised in the fall fashion plates, yet, somehow or other, Lillian seemed a whit short-waisted. Her yellow wig and the adjustment of the suspenders—she didn't appear quite at ease in the remainder of her attire. Her yellowish wig and silk hat caused one's fancy to waver from British blondes to the front part of a minaret parade, but her lighting and smacking of a cigarette claimed admiration for true manly naturalness and ease.

Then Her Own Self.

Later on Miss Russell was her old beautiful self in three lovely gowns, and before the evening was over her brief trespass upon man's estate was almost forgotten and forgiven. The piece was so long that even a great deal more was forgotten in the time the stage was heaped with flowers and midnight speeches were in order. There is plenty of chance for the punning knife in "Whoop-Dee-Do," and while the man is at it he might as well cut the entire comic supplement called "Looney Park." In characters here introduced are better suited to the funny sections of the Sunday papers than to the "Whoop-Dee-Do."

Enough Without It. There is enough without this, particularly in the way of color, for the production is lavishly rich in costume and scenic effects. About the prettiest of these is afforded by the chorus girl groupings during the dancing by Miss Russell of "The Flowers of Dixie Land."

The funniest feature is a show-girl burlesque by Pete Daley, Louis Mann, John T. Kelly and Weber and Fields, who, rigged out as vain and vacuous creatures, back up when they don't break up. Evie Stetson while she warbles "If I Were an Actress," Miss Stetson, who is supposed to succeed Fay Templeton, is a heavy comedienne—exact weight unknown—and might be described as a female Pete Daley. If the stage doesn't give way she ought to, and doubtless will, become a popular member of the Weberfelds family. Louis Mann, the other important newcomer, insured his success by work character of a sort of remodelled Hans Nix. Pete Daley was as funny and fatter than ever; Weber and Fields ably sustained the enviable reputation they have so long enjoyed, and the chorus danced and sang and whooped as only a Weberfelds chorus can. The music, by W. T. Francis, is tuneful and lively, though not notable for song hits, and Mr. Smith's book runs more to epigrammatic quips than to local allusions. It also observes a respectful silence on a matter which for a few days at least may be a tender subject with Miss Russell.

EXCISE CASE EXCUSE WINS.

Saloon-Keeper Telling of Forming Devery Clubs Is Discharged.

In the West Side Court this morning, Matthew Jordan, a saloon-keeper, of No. 58 West Twenty-eighth street, worked upon the Magistrate's good nature by telling a mixed tale of political truth and what goes with it. Jordan, with friends, forgot the hour early last Sunday morning, and were found drinking at a time which the law forbids, said Jordan, "and became so interested that we forgot all about clocks and funny laws."

"Did you get the club organized?" said the Magistrate.

"You bet we did," Your Honor.

"Did you carry the primaries, too?" was the next question.

"We most certainly did, sir," was the reply.

"Well," said the Magistrate, "as primaries come only once a year, I will discharge you."

And Mr. Jordan walked out a free man.

WOMEN CROWD TO SEE THE FALL FASHIONS.

Swagger Walking Costumes Shown at the Oppenheim, Collins & Co. Opening Exhibit.

Swagger walking costumes and new winter-weight shirtrwaists in harmonizing colors are the leading features of the fall opening of Oppenheim, Collins & Company, Broadway and Twenty-first street, and crowds of women are there to see them.

Zibellines, dull plaids and smooth mannish mixtures are the materials of which these leading street gowns are constructed, and the three-quarter coat, made severely plain or with box-plated back and a cluster of side plaits, is the style seen in the most effective models.

Blue, brown and plum broadcloth build the majority of more elaborate full-length gowns, and novel trimmings of brass buttons and tags are used to advantage in ornamenting the coats.

Velvet and velveteen street costumes are shown in a variety of colors and styles. In imported waists there is a beautiful model of white lousine, trimmed with hand-made lace, another of crepe de chine with a yoke formed of lace medallions and Mexican embroidery, and a third beautiful model of white mouseline with lace bolero and tiny inserted squares of coral velvet and velvet knots.

In wash waists there are beautiful models of white mummy cloth, the fronts elaborately embroidered in floral design in blue, white or coral and made back in a loose, man-fashion, unconfined at the waist. Other models of black and white heavy madras show a novel trimming of square china buttons on the front and sleeves, the buttons of red, blue or coral. These waists have high stocks to match, with smart lace or embroidery turn-overs. The materials of which the more expensive waists are constructed are chiefly lousine, crepe de chine and tulle, and elaborate lace yokes and half sleeves ornament the

GIRLS RAN AWAY TO FIND A BEAR

Two Little Daughters of the House of Pierod Go to Central Park to See the Animals.

PICKED UP ON BROADWAY.

They Had Traversed That Thoroughfare from Central Park to Twenty-third Street in their Vain Hunt for Bruin.

Little Gertrude and Loretta Pierod were not among those present at the Cathedral School this morning. Gertrude and Loretta are aged four and six years respectively, and they were discovered at 2 o'clock this morning at Police Headquarters by an anxious father, who had been searching everywhere for them.

The two little Pierods live at No. 614 Lexington avenue, and the reason they did not attend school this morning is because they are so very tired. As a matter of fact the two stubby legged daughters of the house of Pierod have covered more ground in Manhattan in their absence of twelve hours from home than any other little child.

Way back in the history of the house of Pierod there was an ancestor who made a name for himself in a small way as an explorer. The two little Pierods, though of the gender sex, inherit the ancestral love of adventure.

Teacher Told Them.

"Our teacher told us in school all about wild animals yesterday," said Gertrude today, "and it made Loretta and me want to see them. She said there were lots of animals out at Central Park, so we just thought we would go and see."

"My great-grandpa used to have a tame bear that ate out of his hand, and he used to hunt and set lots of animals. Loretta and I want to be like our grandpa. We went out to Central Park, but they wouldn't let us bring a bear home with us. We saw all the monkeys and elephants and a new kangaroo and bears and everything, but when the man wouldn't let us have one Loretta began to cry, so I started to bring her home."

"They Walked and Walked." "When we started home we just walked and walked, but I couldn't see our house anywhere. After awhile we came to a big street, where there were lots of ladies with feathers in their hats and silk dresses, and lots of places where there ladies and men eating in glass houses, and we were awful hungry, but nobody said anything to us."

"And there was one lady with lovely yellow hair, and she was nicer than even the bear in the Park, but she never spoke to us, but kept looking all the time at a big man who had helped her in a funny buggy, and they rode away and then a policeman said, 'Those little girls are you?' and then—"

"Four-year-old Loretta's eyes were sparkling reminiscently at her sister's speech, and she began to add her share to the conversation. 'The policeman took us to a funny place,' she said, 'where a lady, and she wasn't a nice one either, spanked me. Cause I ran away. Finally my papa came and took us home, and I won't go to see the animals any more, but when I'm big I'm going to be like the lady with the yellow hair, and the plume on her hat, that rides in a buggy with two white horses, and a man that sits away up onto the cover.'"

The two little Pierod girls were found at Twenty-third street and Broadway after they had walked the length of the later thoroughfare.
